

Shame on UK

THE CONSPIRATORIAL and provocative visit to Oranjemund by the British Ambassador to South Africa, Sir Patrick Moberly, with his team, must be condemned in the strongest terms.

Shame on Sir Patrick, who did this instead of persuading British Prime Minister, Mrs Margaret Thatcher, to apply tough sanctions against the apartheid regime in Pretoria; the withdrawal of all foreign companies from Namibia and South Africa; and advise CDM and other capitalist companies to cease their exploitation of Namibia's natural resources for the principle benefit of the ruling white minority in South Africa and other imperialistic nations.

We workers see his visit as illegal; and call upon him to tell Mrs Thatcher the following: that the presence of these companies lend legitimacy to the illegal occupation of Namibia; that the taxes paid by these companies economically strengthen apartheid; that Namibia must be handed to the UN; that Swapo has warned against future repercussions; that South Africa must withdraw from Namibia; and that companies such as CDM, TCL and Rossing shall account for their actions after independence.
