

Rebuke For 'Moderates'

WE would all do well to understand and accept that the New War is being waged against an enemy that cannot be reasoned with. An enemy that has no respect for our beliefs, our culture, our values, our religions, or our lives.

Those advocating moderation would do well to grasp hold of some courage, and remember the lesson that Britain learned, too late, when Neville Chamberlain returned from his peace talks waving his hard earned piece of worthless paper.

We would do well to heed the advice of the ex-Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. A man with a knowledge and experience of the difficulties of trying to deal with terrorists and extremists.

Time will prove to us all that we are now faced with a for or against situation.
