

Police Come Short On Rapid Response

WHY is it that when one phones the Police for help, the standard reply is: "Sorry, we don't have any cars available right now. Please try later." Instead they should say: "So sorry, all our bakkies are currently being used as taxis, or Constable or Captain whoever are using the bakkie to pick up their kids from school, or driving their wives to a tea party on the other side of town, or as I noticed this morning at 6 am, a Police bakkie standing in front of the gym, and the officer busy lifting weights, trying to improve his oh-so-good looks, I suspect.

On the other hand, innocent people are being murdered or robbed any time day and night. What about the officers who walk around town doing their shopping? I have nothing against shopping, but if a Police officer is in uniform and on duty, then he should not be shopping; this is wasting taxpayers' money, but then they do not care, and nor does our Government seem to mind either.

Why does one have to rely on private security companies to patrol our streets and keep us safe?

Why is it that one reads almost daily in the paper that Rescue 911 or Proforce have once again caught a car thief red-handed. You never read about the Police having caught a car thief red-handed during their so-called patrols.

We are sick and tired of paying taxes for nothing. At least the Police in the old times were reliable.
