

No SA protection

I definitely do not believe in any SA protection because this is not the case. Protection means to be secure or to live in peace - and this is not the case throughout Namibia.

What the government is doing these days, particularly in the far north is threatening and deplorable, and instead of being protected, innocent people are often killed, in many cases without reason.

I have a specific event in mind: the murder of the old Mr Erkki Shishitwomunku, who was killed on 27 May this year, allegedly by Koevoet members pretending to be Swapo fighters. But fortunately they were caught red-handed by his son.

The question is, who is now representing the people? Is it the SADF or is Namibia an anarchist country? If it is SADF, why are they killing instead of protecting?

We, as people who live near the borders, have nothing to do with the SADF but have long been subject to them. Since 1975 the border towns have become sad places and places of mourning for people killed by the so-called defence force. We do not want protection any more from the South Africa army. We have now been 'protected' for long enough! (13 years is quite a long time).
