

On The Aftermath Of Caprivi Attack

THE recent terrorist attack in the Caprivi must be condemned in the strongest possible terms. In the same breath our guardians, the security forces, must be commended for their swift action in repelling the enemy and bringing the situation under control. In looking at the aftermath however, I'd like the opportunity to say a few things.

Muyongo's safety or peace in Namibia? Denmark's response to our calls for extradition is disappointing. What is more important for them?

The safety of a thug terrorist like Muyongo or the peace and stability in Namibia?

Is it not clear for Denmark that the longer Muyongo enjoys their hospitality the longer he will continue to instigate his fellow terrorists?

He said it himself; the attack was only the beginning. And there is no doubt that there are still some elements who are just waiting for his word to attack again. Namibia is not asking for much from Denmark. Extradite Muyongo so that he can face the full force of the law and be tried for high treason.

He will be accorded the same safety and security as his wayward and confused disciples who have been captured by the security forces. Should more lives be lost because of the irresponsible utterances of Muyongo, I don't see why Namibia should continue having diplomatic relations with Denmark. So, to Denmark, the honourable thing to do is to extradite him.

Who's side is Phil on?

This is not a personal attack on Phil Ya Nangoloh, but I think it is about time he transformed his bitter resentment for the government and the Swapo leadership into positive vibrations and even smoke a piece pipe with the Comrade President.

Was it not the Human Rights Society that squealed at the presence of the security forces in the Caprivi?

The admission further, by the Minister that the security forces were caught off guard is worrying.

Although it confirms circulating suspicions, it reflects badly on the capacity of the National Intelligence.

Their failure to properly infiltrate a disorganised bunch of thugs who were moving freely and openly about calls for a revamp of the institution.

The message should be clear: the recruitment of agents should be balanced enough covering all ethnic groups in the country so that in case someone in Rehoboth wants an own republic by violent means, we won't have to send members of the executive tribe to collect information.

To fellow Namibians in the Caprivi

You are Namibians first and foremost and I am sure that the majority of you do not need a reminder of that. Therefore don't let failed political opportunists like Muyongo to mislead you. We know who he is.

He had the opportunity to prove himself in various capacities and he proved himself to be a power hungry tribalist.

Please continue to cooperate with the security forces for peace in the Caprivi region and stability in Namibia.

Note: Denmark is currently investigating charges against Muyongo, which if verified, could result in him being charged and prosecuted in Denmark.

The Danish government has also pointed out that Namibia has only requested that Muyongo's refugee status be withdrawn, but have not yet requested that he be allowed to stand trial in Namibia. - Ed
