

No Petrol Problem, It Seems!

JUST a short observation by a concerned citizen and taxpayer:

Friday, 23.01.98, a white Toyota Bakkie, licence plate GRN 12338, Ministry of Agriculture, which had a big additional petrol tank on the back was parking in Krupp Street and the petrol out of this back-up tank was pouring, not dripping, out of the filling nozzle of this tank, because it was standing in full sun.

Informing the staff and visitors of the business, in front of which the car was standing, most of the people were not interested. Except for one staff member who went to inform the driver, I received comments like "They have enough money ..."

I was shocked by these reactions: * Does everybody feel the tax payers money is not worth saving? * Are the drivers of government cars so untrained, that they do not know the expansion of petrol in sun heated tanks? * Does care about the pollution, which is the thing that worried me in the first place and why I stopped?
