On SWAPOL

KILLING won't help Namibians, especially those Swapol members in Windhoek.

It is our plea for those peace-loving Namibians to try and look at the political struggle with some common sense.

Many people, especially members of Swapol, also known as Koevoet, seem to believe that physical violence will change our views as Namibians in this country.

I and two comrades, living in the Katutura compound, were assaulted by drunk members of Swapol on April 15 (a Wednesday) after midnight at the Rasta Funk Disco.

Why do members of these forces attack innocent Namibians? Were they appointed to maintain law and order or not?

Are they trained in the right way? Or are they trained to hit and kick innocent people? Shouldn't they be helping us against trespassers of the law?

It seems that many of those people are cowardly rather than brave, and this is why they attack innocent civilians rather than delinquents.

Whatever they do, apartheid will one day be abolished and the racist, apartheid followers in our country, should be given their own 'homeland' where they can do their own things.

We are not against the different forces, but we oppose their shocking conduct towards citizens, and their negative attitude towards the maintenance of law and order.

They should remember that we are all Namibians, and all human beings, and all creatures of God.

Stop this type of behaviour and instead look for better strategies to fight racial oppression, discrimination and apartheid.
